The flight of time has made it necessary to mention the fact, though not for the sake of news, that another year has passed since we began keeping record of events in and around Stoops, making a total of six years that we have added discomfort to the patient hand of OUTLOOK readers.

We think we have achieved a record in regard to country correspondence during those six years, though it is not with the PEN of an egotist that we mention the fact. We have not failed to send our items a single week, but sometimes it was under adverse circumstances that we got them off.

And THE OUTLOOK has received our items too late for publication the same week only twice.

We have found the companionship of THE OUTLOOK force pleasant indeed, though the forces in the office now are not the ones of those six years ago. The old force is somewhat scattered; some have crossed over the Great Divide, and others have sought foreign fields to gain fame and riches.

But THE OUTLOOK goes on just the same, drifting with the multitude farther and farther towards the mighty ocean of Eternity. For the readers we know that the "rainbow of promise" has not always shown in iridescent colors; the colors have been black indeed. But why discuss the past further? We will leave it in the tomb behind, and turn to unlock the door of the Future.

Wise Girl.—Now there was a wise girl and she had three woos. The first wooer said she was all the world to him, but she frowned upon his suit. The second wooer said she was the sun, moon and stars to him, but she bade him go on his way.

"To me," said the third, "you are a young woman of agreeable manners, with eyes that might be a little bluer, with nose a wee bit pugy, and with a few freckles, and an annoying habit of blurring out your thought."

She married the third wooer. Being pressed for an explanation of her conduct, she said: "My goodness! I think I was that had courage enough to tell me my faults before marriage, instead of waiting to throw them up to me afterward."—Life.

THE MISER OF LORETTA.—Charles M. Schwab, in a studio in New York, was describing a very mean dealer in pictures who had tried to cheat him.

"For meanness," said Schwab, "I can only compare the man to a Loretta miser."

"What do you mean?" asked the miser lost once near Loretta to a pocketbook containing a thousand dollars.

"The pocketbook was found after a few days by a poor farmer, and he, as soon as he discovered the name of the owner, returned it."

The miser, after getting back his money, counted it again and again, and the oftener he counted it the blacker became his scowl.

"What's the matter?" said the farmer anxiously. "Isn't it all right?"

"Right. No," growled the miser. "Where's the interest?"

BROUGHT TO TIME.—"Ethel," he whispered, "will you marry me?"

"I don't know, Charles," she replied coyly.

"Well, when you find out," he said, rising, "send me a word, will you? I shall be at Mabel Hicks' until ten o'clock. If I don't hear from you by ten I'm going to ask her."

FOR SOCIABILITY'S SAKE.—An Irishman attending a banquet when asked to sing a song or make a speech, said he couldn't do "either nor nayther." When told he must do something to be sociable he said: "I can't sing a song or make a speech, but to be sociable I'll fight any man in the house."

Rodney took down a gun and began to free it from an escaped splinter from the snuff brush.

"When he saw 'em jaw war' keepin' camp, my snuff war'n' good enough for me. He 'lowed I wuz to have half creation. Since we wuz married he ain't never found time, except when he wuz drunk, to build me a bird house. I wuz raised in Tennessee, an' we uns had a house for marins made out'n poulds, an' it wuz peart."

"Mrs. Rodney"—Swift turned toward her and whispered something in her ear. She regarded him tentatively, then, at her time of life, she should see the pat faith in the promises of men, and she said: "You get your bird house."

While this discussion had been in progress the visitors had not been neglecting to look at the house. The company as a whole had been of the opinion that the house appeared
